

How much land does each state need to achieve an average of 94 residents per square mile?

Using 2021 population density statistics from the census, this project aims to depict the population density of each state (including Washington D.C.) by adjusting its original land area to achieve the national average of 94 residents per square mile.