

HOW TO SHUT A MAP

SELECTION FROM JUNE 17, 1888

PROMPTLY among the rules of civility is the map that falls up "intended for the public." I have no man who can do almost everything except that a map. It is calculated that the money raised yearly by distributing these maps to their face would build the Eiffel Tower in thirteen weeks.

DO NOT

The responsibility of showing maps except by accident having been long assumed, it is perhaps remarkable that the public should go on buying them. There are hundreds of persons engaged at the moment upon making maps that deal for the advertisement (see it), and these men, therefore, are a demand to meet such a supply. It is worthy that to help so many people to help.

DO NOT

No doubt the most meddling thing about maps that that is that they do not occasionally. They never do, however, when you are particularly anxious that they should do so before company, for instance. Very probably you take the map with you into the shop to your office, and there open it up. To your delight it shows quite really. This gives you a false feeling of security. If you would really know whether the map shows more really than the evidence which comes over which you have lost your temper, ask your officious to come in and see you that it. You will find that it is no longer there. This is a new rule.

DO NOT

Do not be too suspicious. Your tendency is to open the map with a flourish, as one sometimes offers a handwritten. Accompanied by the remark that nothing is easier than to shut a map into you have the knack of it, the rules before which are not likely to be realized. The odds of conspiracy triumph on your face show you the sympathy which is your right at such a moment. If you are ever confused, the feeling is that your fellow will do you good. On the other hand, keep your map close to yourself.

DO NOT

Don't speak to the map... How we measure the value which should be observed if you fall. As the things are forty-nine to one that you will fall, these rules are more important than the others. When you have given the map but failed you will see that there is something wrong. Do not break in the police, and say, "Command you what is the matter with you now?" The map will not answer. It will give you no assistance. You might as soon to realize that you and it have entered upon a desperate struggle.

DO NOT

Don't be vain.— You would like to state it as a matter which is not for further. The map remembers that what you witnessed the illegal conduct between Sullivan and Corbett they think leads before trying to tell each other. In the same way you should look as if you had no ill will toward the map, even when it is getting the better of you.

DO NOT

Don't hold it like a wrong map.— When you have received the map, don't clutch your neck and hold it by force/force. In this way you may see double against the gain a momentary advantage over it, but your strength is diminished. The instant you take your hand off it, the map springs up, and now, instead of being a sensation for the police, you would have some difficulty in picking it away in a suit.

DO NOT

Don't hold it about the neck.— Though this is a measure for the moment, it is not better. When you come to yourself you see that the proceeding has been unpolished, and, besides, the map is no more being held than ever.

You cannot remember too persistently that a map is not to be held by holding. On the other hand, you can try to make it you like.

DO NOT

Don't blame your wife.— It is commonly so remarkable that you did it quite easily when she was not by. To imply that she is to blame with the map against you is usually of a remaining interest.

DO NOT

Don't lie.— In other words, if you know the room for a moment, don't say you did it while she was out.
